Workout Overview

Work hard and smart. To see results, you need to challenge yourself. Focus completely on what you're doing and choose each exercise at a level that is challenging for you, but not impossible. Remember – it should be difficult, but make sure to maintain perfect form on every rep (rep = 1 repetition of the exercise).

You will primarily use big, compound exercises, including squats, deadlifts, single leg exercises, push-ups, rows, presses, and other exercises. These exercises help you build a better, stronger body in the least amount of time.

Perform at least 2 workouts per week. The formula provides two full body workout options. These could be done on consecutive days or with a day or two in between. Depending on your goals and schedule add more workout days to the week.

Each workout day is made up of 5 components to create a fully balanced workout.

- Upper Body Pull: movements requiring the body to make a pull motion, such as row or biceps curl.
- Upper Body Push: movements requiring the body to make a push motion, such as press or push up.
- Lower Body: movements done by the lower body, such as squat or lunge.
- Core: movements done by the abdominals and obliques, such as crunches or side plank.
- Cardio Finisher: a combination of a short burst of work with minimal rest using plyometric exercise (plyometric or "jump training" exercises is where muscles exert maximum force in short intervals of time). These moves help increase your cardiovascular endurance and power.

Over 40 exercises to choose from, with a variety of levels and modifications. Use the Exercise Library (starts on page 8) to select which exercise(s) you will do for each category, then follow the prescribed reps.
